

INFORMATION ON COOKIE USE

Cookies are short pieces of information that are sent and stored on the hard drive of the user's computer through their browser when it connects to a website. Cookies can be used to gather and store the user's data while the user is connected in order to provide them with the services they have requested ("session cookies") which are not usually stored, or to keep the user's data for other types of future services which may be kept for an indefinite period ("persistent cookies"). It is possible to encounter own and third-party cookies.

There are several types of cookie:

- technical cookies, which assist the user's browsing and use the different options and services offered on the website, such as logging into a session, allowing access to certain areas of the website and assisting with orders, purchases, filling in forms, registrations, security and the different functionalities (videos, social networks, etc.);
- personalisation cookies, which allow the user to access services based on their preferences (language, browser, settings, etc.);
- analysis cookies, which allow anonymous analysis of user behaviour on the website and enable the user's activity to be measured and the creation of browsing profiles, with the purpose of improving the website;
- advertising cookies, which enable management of advertising spaces on the website;
- personalised advertising cookies, which enable advertising spaces on the website to be managed based on the user's browsing behaviour and habits, which form the basis of their profile and make it possible to personalise the advertising shown in the user's browser.
